Finding Videos Using the Library Catalog

There's not much you can do until you open the library's webpage at http://www.lib.fsu.edu. Once there, click 'advanced'.

Once you're on the library's main page, click 'advanced'. This allows you to limit your search to suit your needs.

To search by title, enter the video's title in the first box; use the drop-down menu to select 'Title'. Now limit your search to videos in the Digital Media Center by selecting 'Strozier, Multimedia Center' in the 'Location:' dropdown, and 'Video (all formats)' in the 'Format:' box.

Use this drop-down menu to select the 'Title' field.

Enter the title of the video here.

Make sure you're searching in the Media Center.

Use this dropdown to limit your search to one specific type of media. Other video formats include DVD and videocassette.
To search by subject or other field, or to search by multiple fields, enter your keywords and select the appropriate fields from the dropdowns.

Directors and studios are considered authors.

Specific editions of videos and DVDs—here, the Criterion Collection—may be listed in the catalog as a series.

Although somewhat helpful, the language dropdown only guarantees that the specified language appears somewhere in the video’s record—as subtitle, dub, or original language.

Your last step is to press search and hope for the best.
